

Living with an old EV

Back in 2019, before the world changed with COVID, John & Michelle bought an EV. It was expensive, 3 years old and had 30,000 miles on the clock. But it came with free charging if they could find / use Tesla superchargers.

The car is now coming up to 9 years old, has 95,000 miles on the clock and (like its owners) is perhaps not as perfect as it once was.

Join John & Michelle for an honest chat about EV ownership, the challenges and the transition to electric transportation.

And did the dream of The Long Free Ride with Tesla paying the fuel bill work out? Come and find out.
